

October 2008

"Para quitar el diablo." I am very happy to say that this is a saying that is becoming very popular among the Kumiai tribe I work with now. It means, "to kick the devil out." Recently we have seen a surge among the tribe in decisions to be baptized. They jokingly say it is to "kick out the devil" but there is a seriousness in what they are saying as well. They are tired of being in bondage to sin. Last Sunday Joaquin, a Kumiai member a pastor and I witnessed to was baptized. It was a great event with his whole family there to witness. After the baptism his sister, Lola, decided she would like to be baptized. One other sister is going through a preparation class and another sister is seriously deciding.

The picture you have has Joaquin in the middle just after being "dunked" with the pastor who was there when I shared the Gospel with Joaquin last month (on the right). Praise God for this great movement and thanks for your continued prayers for this tribe!

Take care,

Tim Nash

Tecate, Mexico